

Helping patients get to treatment is a team effort.
We need your help.

For people facing cancer, often what's standing between them and lifesaving treatment is a ride to get there.

The American Cancer Society Road To Recovery[®] program is at the very heart of our work to remove barriers to quality health care. We need volunteer drivers to help make sure people with cancer in our community can get to the treatment they need.

We need drivers now more than ever.

In many communities across the country, the requests for rides to cancer treatment outpace the number of volunteers who are able to fulfill those requests. In most communities, we're only able to fulfill about half of the ride requests.

Interested volunteers can learn more about the requirements and screening process at cancer.org/drive. Volunteers can be on the road in just a couple of weeks.

Coach Engagement Opportunities:

- Record a video about becoming a volunteer driver to share on social media, on campus, or in the arena.
- Offer to schedule an interview with your local radio and TV stations.
- Distribute driver recruitment cards at games and other public events.
- Recruit Road To Recovery volunteer drivers through email and newsletter communications to season ticket holders and alumni.
